Law360 turned to Kevin Kuhn for insight on medical malpractice caps. In the article “Biggest Colorado Decisions of 2024,” Kevin reflected on the significance of decisions Colorado justices and state lawmakers have made this year that affect damages caps and how they’re calculated.

The article highlighted a Colorado Supreme Court decision that found a trial court couldn’t consider a medical malpractice plaintiff’s insurance when deciding whether a case merited exceeding the state’s $1 million soft cap for economic damages.

Kevin was quoted as saying, “The Colorado Supreme Court noted that there were compelling policy concerns on both sides of this case . . . But at the end of the day, the court thought it was the General Assembly’s role, not the courts’ to weigh those concerns.”
