Gillian Burnham represents clients in various civil litigation, including medical malpractice defense. She has researched medical issues, assisted with trial preparation, drafted motions for sanctions, and acted as a liaison between attorneys and expert witnesses.

Jill has a degree in engineering that helps her appreciate the intersection of science and law. She has a background in biomedical research and worked as a legal intern for National Jewish Health's Office of General Counsel, where she developed an understanding of the legal issues healthcare providers face, from data privacy to patient care regulations.

Jill's personal interests include Irish dance, volleyball, and cheering on the Colorado Avalanche.
